for a body of believers had been won for the Lord Jesus that was the apostle's "joy and crown." The peace and prosperity that marked the commencement of his work in Europe was interrupted by a street incident that was the signal for battle with the hosts of darkness. It started, with a street interview with a poor, demon-possessed girl who was made merchandise of by her group of owners, who had commercialized her abnormal mental condition and her gifts of ventriloquism. The citizens of Phillipi considered that she was possessed by the spirit of Python, and Paul was troubled by her public testimony concerning his work. Jesus refused to accept demoniacal support. Paul followed the example of Christ and summoned the spirit to come out of her. With his effective word of healing Paul put to an end her work as a soothsayer. This became the occasion of a violent persecution.

Apostolic Trial.

Paul had faced angry mobs instinot only by the prisoners, who no doubt marveled at the strange religion, that brought joy in sorrow, but also by their Lord, who loved them, watched over them and gave them victory by means of an earthquake. Apostolic Triumph.

Suddenly there came another sound.

terrific crash that aroused the jailer from his slumbers to his danger. The from his slumbers to his danger. The dramatic incidents that followed in rapid succession, ending in the conversion of the jailer, illustrates the quick ness of Paul to take advantage of every opportunity and his effectiveness as a preacher of the gospel. His call for the despairing one to "do thyself no harm, for we are all here." has since been repeated throughout the whole world, "warning the poor dupe of his own gelfish despair, whether in gambler's den, saloon, brothel. Sabbath-breaking excursion or standing upon the first steps that lead the self-indulging youth down to ruin." The words of Paul filled the jailer with conviction, and the fervent question came from his throbbing heart, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved."

Paul rejoiced when he heard that cry come from his sin-stricken jailer's lips. The conviction of sin had filled the Roman official with a conception of its consequences, so that he immediately sought the way of salvation. The apostle's answer to this all important question involved the two central principles of Christianity—faith and obedience. The offer of salvation was given to him and his whole household upon the same consideration of the Fourth Presbyterian Church.

The Baltimore trio has made a great reputation for itself in the state of Maryland and adjoining territory, it is pointed out, and is composed of earnest workers in the gospel field, who banded together some years ago for the purpose of aiding in the work of converting men. Since that time they have sung all and other adjoining states, and have never missed an invitation to sing where some work for the cause might be accomplished. They are not strangers to the Central Union Mission and the workers there, for they have aided it on many occasions in special services. The trio is made up of Thomas H. service tomorrow evening at Place Memorial Church by the WHY GO TO CHURCH?

By Rev. Francis M. McCoy, Pastor of Waugh Methodist Episcopal Church.

The question comes with new emphasis upon this wonderful spring day, when nature wears her best garments and invites with open arms. Having spent six days indoors, why not worship God in His forest cathedrals, where the winds whisper His music and the flowers speak His messages?

We ask the question with the usual gravity. The reply would be easy were it not for one simple fact: Men seldom worship when on a Sunday outing. Pleasure-seekers do not tread softly lest they disturb some worshiper amid the trees. Three important reasons may be given why we should go to church

Three important reasons may be given why we should go to church. First, the sense of obligation should be strong upon us. We are in debt to that body which has brought us a rich heritage. The church has been a custodian of rich treasures across the centuries. We would be ingrates indeed if we did not feel a debt of allegiance to this source of our enrichment.

Nor should we forget, secondly, our responsibility as members of society. The church is of great moral value to the community, helping mankind along the difficult and ascending way. Who so privileged as to profit by its presence through the week and throw all the responsibility of its work upon others on the day set apart for its particular activity? Never before did the church strive for the redemption for the whole of society as it does today. It challenges the co-operation of every one. The church is central to our social welfare.

But another great essential is our own need of worship. It is a great pity that any man should forget his larger life. We become Godlike through thought on God and communion with Him. We grow holy in His presence. Worship is vital to our growth. It is a lesson of solemn meaning that we can point to the pew where Washington worshiped and the place where Lincoln sat in the church on Sunday. Worship leads to greatness of character and church attendance is absolutely necessary in the lives of many of us to keep alive the spirit of worship.
